European Secondary Surveillance Radar Ssr

Secondary surveillance radar (SSR) is a radar system used in air traffic control (ATC), that unlike primary radar systems that measure the bearing and distance of targets using the detected reflections of radio signals, relies on targets equipped with a radar transponder, that reply to each interrogation signal by transmitting encoded data such as an identity code, the aircraft's altitude and further information depending on its chosen mode.

This document is part of the European Secondary Surveillance Radar (SSR) Code Management Plan. It has been established to provide States in the ICAO EUR Region with the means to coordinate the use of the SSR codes based on the principles of the Originating Region Code Assignment Method (ORCAM) and enhanced ORCAM (eORCAM), which provide for the most efficient and economical use of codes.

The primary surveillance radar is subject to the radar equation that says signal strength drops off as the fourth power of distance to the target. Objects detected using the PSR are known as primary targets. The second system is the secondary surveillance radar, or SSR, which depends on a cooperating transponder installed on the aircraft being ...

Usually the PSR and SSR radars are co-located. A plot combiner at the radar site combines them (or not), and transmits reports to the ATM system as SSR reinforced, SSR only, or PSR only. Then, expanding somewhat on @Greg Hewgill's answer, the ATM system receives input from multiple radar sites, and possibly other sources such as ADS-B.
