This is also commonly known as "woodland forget-me-not" and it is a type of short-lived, herbaceous perennial plant. It belongs to the Boraginaceae family and has originated from Europe and Asia. The Wood Forget-Me-Not is a tufted and hairy spring-flowering plant that is easily grown in well-drained, moist and organically rich soils.

10 Different Types of Forget-Me-Not Flowers

Forget-me-nots are easy-to-grow plants, requiring little maintenance. Commonly grown from seed, forget-me-nots are often treated as biennals or short-lived perennials. Seeds can be sown directly in the garden in the fall for early-spring blooms. The self-sowers may become invasive unless spread is controlled by deadheading. Forget-me-nots form dense mats of foliage by producing above-ground runners.
